Undergraduate Academic Integrity
We, the students of Arizona State University, have adopted this code as an affirmation of our commitment to academic integrity and our participation in ethical education.

We embrace our duty to uphold the Honor Code, and in light of that duty,

We promise to refrain from academic dishonesty.

We pledge to act with integrity and honesty and to promote these values among our peers.

We agree to always abide by the Sun Devil Way and uphold the values of the New American University.

Academic Integrity

Integrity involves a character-driven commitment to honesty, doing what is right, and guiding others to do what is right.
Academic Integrity

According to the ASU Deputy Provost, “integrity involves a character-driven commitment to honesty, doing what is right, and guiding others to do what is right” (Lindquist, 2018).

Case Study

It’s a Tuesday evening in your first semester of college and you are really homesick. You’re excited, because you get to leave the next day to go home for Thanksgiving break. This break means a lot to you, not only because you’re feeling stressed and homesick but because you have been having problems with your girlfriend/boyfriend and you seriously need some time to work things out.
Before you can go home though, you’ve got to finish a calculus homework assignment. You think about starting the assignment…but you are so exhausted from all the time you spent this weekend finishing projects. To make matters worse, you were sick one day last week and you missed the class where your teacher went over how to do the homework problems. As the assignment deadline approaches, you start to panic. You’re thinking to yourself…If I don’t get the full points for this assignment, I’m going to have a D going into the final exams…If you fail this course you don’t even want to know how it might effect your scholarship…or what your parents might say.

As all of this races through your mind…you’re certain that if you had more time…you could easily figure out the problems own your own. So, because you know you’re capable of doing the work…you convince yourself it’s OK to take a shortcut you heard about from your roommate. You decide to take a picture of each homework question and post them on an online website…and wait for one of the tutors to respond and show you the solution. Within a couple of hours you have the answers for each of your problems, so you copy them to your assignment and submit it…just on time.
